THE LESSON.

NOTE:—The following poem is re-published because when it was first published in The Planer of Feb. 28th, 98, three of the original stanzas were inadvertently left out. The three added stanzas are the 4th, 5th and 8th.

I sat upon yon hillock, Of romance dreaming on, A gentle breeze blew softly Over the grassy lawn.
The songs of birds entranced me,
As I watched the browsing fawn, Which either slept or gamboled Since gray and early dawn.

Behind the western hills,
And left a glowing promise
Which all my being fills.
The skies were flecked with fleeces
Of golden clouds like wool,
And half the arch of heaven
Of mellow light was full.

Which sounds yet in mine ear, Twas sweeter far than music, Than all the world more dear. It said that radiant sunset Was but a faint emblen Of what they'll see who follow The Babe of Bethlehem.

And there I sat, still dreaming, Until the red and gold Had melted into orange. On ground of gray so cold.

And then the shades grew deeper,
And there was less of light.

All colors now had faded In the darkness of the night.

But the air remained so balmy, I would not yield my seat, And miss the nightly miracle Which Nature would repeat: Now, one by one there trembled.
The twinkling stars to view.
And then in clusters coming, The dome of heaven strew.

There was the famed Job's coffin, And there the Seven Stars.
The great and little Dippers,
And red and fiery Mars;
Fixed stars, revolving planets,
Shed forth their rays so bright, And now, the stillness 'round me, Declares that it is night.

Yet still I fondly lingered In that vast dark school-room, Where Nature, the great teacher, Dispelled the palling gloom By the clearness of her pre. pts, In whispered accents told Revealing God in nature, As sages saw of old.

Then came forth silvery Saturn, Encompassed by his rings And four sun-lighted Jupiter, Whose praise the gazer sings Then came again that whisper, And smote my willing ear, Uttered in sweetest accents And smote my willing ear,
Uttered in sweetest accents
Which I rejoiced to hear:
"The heavens declare the glory of God!
"And the firmament sheweth Hishandy-work.

The heavens declare the glory of God!
"And the firmament sheweth Hishandy-work.

The heavens declare the glory of God!
Who was in attendance, was incoded and said a few encouraging words.
